

1939 REGISTER

At the outbreak of World War II, the government urgently needed to know everything it could about the civil population of England and Wales. This information would be key in the issuing of identity cards and ration books when rationing was introduced in January 1940, as well as organising conscription and after the war creating the N.H.S.

To gather this information a National Register was created. On September 29th 1939 the personal details; names, dates of birth, occupations, marital status of 41 million individuals were recorded.

It is important because it records the world on the eve of a war.

65,000 enumerators issued households with registration forms to be completed on September 29th 1939. The following week enumerators visited each household to check and collect the forms and to issue identity cards to anyone who had been present in that house on 29th September.

It records only the civilian population, members of the armed forces were not intended to be included but it does record members of the armed forces on leave at the surveyed addresses.

Many records are still shown as closed. Individuals records remain closed for 100 years from their date of birth. Records remain closed until proof of death is verified.

More records will become available under the 100 year rule as the record is updated.

The register is not the same as a census there are variations.

This was completed at a time of National emergency to prepare for the logistics of war.

The material in this transcript uses headings from the original forms. References on the header of each sheet indicate the area surveyed
